

I told you about Musa. This is about Yabosuwa, his cousin. Now I'm going to tell you about Yabosuwa. They made Musa's party with food. I'm going to tell you for Yabosuwa.

Musa and Yabosuwa stayed, but it was not o.k. Each had a different kawo, so they separated. When Yabosuwa moved he looked back and saw Musa's house. When he saw the house he said, "I won't stay here; I'll go further." He moved down to Dabi. When he stayed at Dabi he looked up and saw his brother's house so he moved again. He moved all the way to Goodenough. When he sat on Goodenough mountain, he saw his brother's mountain. He said, "That's o.k. I can see my brother's mountain and he can see mine." So he stayed on Goodenough.

When he went to stay at Goodenough all the people prepared all sorts of good food. They killed a boy too. They cooked and ate the boy in a big party. They ate that boy and drank the soup. So today all these eastern people belong to Yabosuwa. From Maisin and this side, it all belongs to Musa. When Yabosuwa went to Goodenough, they killed a boy. For Musa's party they killed pig, got coconut, betelnut and food and made a party with that. So Musa's people are o.k, but Yabosuwa's people eat human being, so that's not good.
