

Every afternoon the girls used to go down and sweep the varo. When it got dark all of the boys would go down and start dancing. They danced all night, and when the sun was coming up they would go to sleep. Their parents went to the gardens and got flowers for them. In the afternoon the girls would sweep the varo again and they would go out in the night to dance. They kept doing that. One afternoon the boys and girls were dancing and said, "We'll go to sleep." Then they danced to the middle of the night and stopped. They didn't go to their own houses; all of the boys went to the girls' houses and they slept there. Early in the morning the boys went back to their own houses. When the sun came up their fathers and mothers went to the gardens and brought them back flowers. In the afternoon the girls swept the varo. They danced until the middle of the night and then they went to their own houses to sleep. When the sun was coming up all the boys and girls came together and said, "All of us will go and look for our si'si." So they all left for the bush to look for their si'si.

They did not wake up Kawoki Susuki. When they went Kawoki boyfriend asked her rukan, "Did Kawoki Susuki come with you?" "No, she is still in the village." So the boy gave her rukan some flowers and said, "Give these to Kawoki Susuki." When she woke up, Kawoki said, "You should have woken me up and I would go with my friends." But her father said, "It's all right, we'll go to the garden." So she went with her mother and father to the garden. They were working in the garden when the father said, "I'll go with my daughter. She'll stand and I will climb the betelnut." The mother said, "That's nene. You go with our daughter." So they went and the daughter was standing while the father climbed up. Then he told her, "You cut leaves and put them under this tree. She did that and the father said, "You lie down and I'll have sex with you." The girl said, "I don't want that. You're my father." The father kept on talking but the girl didn't want. So he finally threw her down and had sex with her. Then he picked up his betelnut and went back to the garden. The girl was crying. She went to her mother in the garden. As she walked she cried and said, "I thought that you were my father, but you are my husband. I thought that she would be my mother, but she will be my wowosi." She kept crying and her mother heard her, "Kawoki Susuki, why are you crying?" The wife was very cross. When she saw her husband she began to scold him, "What happened that Kawoki Susuki is crying?" But the husband said, "No, she is just crying."

She walked crying all the way to her house, her parents coming back later. She stayed up there while her friends decorated themselves to dance. They started dancing, but she did not join them. All of her friends danced until the next morning. When she came down in the morning she saw that all of them were sleeping so she went back up into her house. She got all of her things. She came down and went to her rukan's place and called out. "Rukan! I am going away. I won't stay in this place." The rukanman asked why but she said, "I won't tell you the reason, but I am going away."

So that morning Kawoki Susuki's boyfriend went and got his si'si and that of Kawoki Susuki's. Kawoki Susuki therefore told her rukan, "Tell this boy that I am going away. If he wants to follow me he can, or he can stay back." When she got all of her things she went down with her Rukan to the beach. She said to her, "You mustn't go with me." But the rukan insisted on going. But Kawoki Susuki said, "You won't come," and the rukaman stayed back. The rukaman was very sad and when she came back into the village she was crying. She walked, walked, walked, walked all the way past one village. Then she walked, walked, walked, walked past a second village. She kept on walking. It was getting dark, so she sat down chewing betelnut, waiting for the boy. When the boy came back from the garden, he got some si'si, decorated himself and then went up to page 2

Kawoki Susuki's cousin. "Where is Kawoki Susuki?" The rukan said, "She got up in the morning and told me that she was leaving this place. I asked her why but she didn't tell me. She said, tell this boy that he must come after me because I will not come back to this place."

At that time it was getting dark. The boy ran up to his house and got his things. He ran to the beach, but it was very dark and he had to turn back. All of the boys and girls were dancing, but he was very sad so he just went to sleep. "I'll get up and get her tomorrow morning," he thought to himself.

After this it is exactly the same as Guy's version No. 119